Abstract

This research work has fundamental premise to help solve an everyday topic that has to do with problems of unequal society in which we live, access to justice or well regarded as the inaccessibility, the same problem that in the present case will be addressed as a sociological problem primarily without ignoring the complex and interrelated nature of knowledge. In this sense is intended to study the perceptions of the population of the municipality of Sucre, around the reasons why in spite of feeling with sufficient justifications for resorting to the State jurisdiction not made it, which will give us a reflection of perception concerning the State Justice part of the population, within the framework of the same investigative path will be an analysis of comparative public policy designed to alleviate the problem of inaccessibility to justice in other countries. So are also made specific proposals, mainly through public policy to reduce the effects produced by the perception that we have of the Bolivian State Justice, taking into account multiculturalism, based on the theoretical - methodological and diagnosis of this social epidemic.

Key words: State jurisdiction, access to justice, perception and public policy, multiculturalism.
